Abstracts

The global Cat Food market size is predicted to grow from US$ 51359 million in 2025 to US$ 64297 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 3.6% from 2026 to 2032.

In 2025, global cat food production is estimated at approximately 25.0 million tons, with an average selling price of about USD 2,100 per ton. Cat food is a type of pet food primarily formulated from meat and animal by-products, supplemented with grains, fats, minerals, vitamins, and functional additives, and processed through extrusion, air-drying, low-temperature baking, freeze-drying, or wet food techniques. Designed to meet the specific nutritional requirements of cats as obligate carnivores, cat food typically features a higher proportion of animal protein and stricter requirements for ingredient quality and palatability compared with dog food. In recent years, rising urbanization and the growth of single-person households have driven continuous increases in cat ownership, supporting steady expansion of the cat food market.

From a market structure perspective, extruded cat food remains the mainstream product form in the global cat food market, but the growth rate of wet food, air-dried food, freeze-dried food, and low-temperature baked cat food is significantly faster than the overall market. Cat food consumption is showing stronger characteristics of premiumization and refinement, with consumers paying increasing attention to grain-free formulas, high meat content, functionalities (such as urinary tract health and hairball control), and natural ingredients. Overall, the brand concentration in the cat food industry is higher than that in the dog food industry, with leading international brands holding a clear advantage in the premium and functional product sectors. The market generally believes that driven by both the increase in the number of cats and the increase in spending per cat, the cat food market has long-term stable growth potential.

LP Information, Inc. (LPI) ' newest research report, the ?Cat Food Industry Forecast?

looks at past sales and reviews total world Cat Food sales in 2025, providing a comprehensive analysis by region and market sector of projected Cat Food sales for 2026 through 2032.
