The global Chromate Conversion Coating Services market size is predicted to grow from US$ 509 million in 2025 to US$ 707 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 4.8% from 2026 to 2032.

Chromate conversion coating services refer to surface treatment services provided by surface treatment providers for aluminum and aluminum alloy-based metal components. Through chemical treatments such as immersion, spraying, brushing, or spot repair, the surface of the workpiece undergoes a controlled chemical reaction with a treatment solution containing chromates, trivalent chromium, non-hexavalent chromium, or other conversion systems, forming an extremely thin, uniform conversion film that essentially does not alter the dimensions of the part. This film is typically used to improve the corrosion resistance of metal surfaces, paint and adhesive adhesion, electrical continuity, and grounding reliability, and can serve as a pretreatment layer for subsequent painting, coating, bonding, dry film lubrication, or electrical connection applications.

From a demand structure perspective, aerospace, defense, and electronics/electrical engineering remain the sources of high-value demand. Aerospace and defense components require stable corrosion protection, paint adhesion, electrical connections, and batch traceability; electronic and communication equipment, heat sinks, chassis, and connector applications focus more on conductivity, grounding continuity, and film dimensional stability; the automotive lightweighting, industrial equipment, and precision machinery markets offer broader demand for low- to mid-priced components. Because this process is typically embedded in parts manufacturing, repair, and remanufacturing processes, market growth will not be explosive, but it is supported by relatively stable demand for repair and replacement, defense capital expenditure, and high-reliability manufacturing.
