Chrome-plated bar refers to a bar with a hardness of 50-60 that is electroplated with a layer of chromium on the surface of the hard optical shaft. Since the surface of chrome-plated rods is plated with a layer of chromium, chrome-plated rods are widely used in the electroplating industry.

The hardness of the chromium plating layer is high and varies within a wide range of 400 to 1200HV. The chromium plating layer has good heat resistance. When heated below 500°C, its gloss and hardness will not change significantly. Oxidation and discoloration begin when the temperature is higher than 500°C, and hardness begins to decrease when the temperature is higher than 700°C. Due to the excellent properties of the chromium plating layer, it is widely used as the outer layer and functional coating of protective coating systems.

Chrome-plated bars are widely used in the manufacturing of various precision parts, shafts, guide rails, bearing raceways, hydraulic system components and other parts that require high wear resistance and corrosion resistance. For example, they can be used as linear guides, hydraulic cylinder rods, piston rods in automotive parts, etc.

The global Chrome Plated Bar market size is projected to grow from US$ 706 million in 2024 to US$ 972 million in 2030; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 5.5% from 2024 to 2030.
