A cleaning validation service is a professional process provided by specialized companies to verify and document that cleaning procedures in regulated environments—such as pharmaceutical, biotechnology, medical device, and food manufacturing—effectively remove residues of products, cleaning agents, and potential contaminants to predefined acceptable levels. This service involves a systematic approach including risk assessments, protocol development, sampling (typically swab and rinse methods), analytical testing, and final validation reports that comply with regulatory standards such as those set by the FDA, EU GMP, and ICH guidelines. Cleaning validation ensures that cross-contamination risks are minimized and that equipment is consistently cleaned to meet product safety, quality, and compliance requirements. Service providers also help develop and optimize cleaning procedures, train personnel, and support inspections or audits by regulatory authorities.
