Collagen gel is a collagen-based gel-like substance commonly used in biomedical and bioengineering applications. Collagen is a structural protein that is one of the most abundant proteins in many organisms and has good biocompatibility and biodegradability. The formation of collagen gel is usually achieved through cross-linking or aggregation between collagen molecules, forming a three-dimensional network structure. This gel has a structure and biological properties similar to natural tissue, and is often used as a biomaterial scaffold, tissue engineering, drug delivery system, etc. Due to its biocompatibility and bioactivity, collagen gel has a wide range of applications in the medical field.

The global Collagen Gel market size is projected to grow from US$ 2802 million in 2024 to US$ 4077 million in 2030; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 6.5% from 2024 to 2030.
