Concentrated butter is also known as Anhydrous milk fat (AMF) and its market is anticipated to grow rapidly in coming years. AMF is derived or obtained from pasteurized milk or butter which is 100% cow milk that is heated and centrifuged after removal of water and non-fat dry matters are removed physically such as mil protein, lactose, and minerals. Market evaluation such as shifting preferences has led towards serious development in the concentrated butter industry. Concentrated butter contains Vitamin A, D, E, 99% of milk fat and is lactose-free with 1% of water in it and has a melting point at 34-35 degrees centigrade. Concentrated butter is generally termed butter for industrial purposes and comes in variations. It is used mostly for the production of food and confectionery products. Due to its richness in milk fat, it gives a pleasant taste and doubles the volume of creaming when applied.
