Conveyor belt secondary cleaners are auxiliary cleaning devices installed on belt conveyors to remove fine particles or dust remaining on the belt surface after primary cleaning, ensuring cleanliness and minimizing material loss. Positioned downstream of primary cleaners, these devices utilize blades or brushes that maintain close contact with the belt for efficient residue removal. Made from materials like polyurethane or wear-resistant rubber, secondary cleaners combine flexibility and durability to achieve thorough cleaning without damaging the belt. They are widely applied in industries such as mining, cement plants, and grain processing, effectively reducing dust pollution, extending belt life, and enhancing overall conveyor efficiency. Their designs prioritize adjustability and ease of maintenance to adapt to varying operational conditions and material properties.
