The global Copper Chromite market size is predicted to grow from US$ 20.09 million in 2025 to US$ 26.78 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 4.3% from 2026 to 2032.

Copper chromite is a black or brownish-black inorganic compound with a spinel-type structure. It is primarily used as an industrial catalyst, particularly in hydrogenation reactions in organic synthesis (such as the reduction of aldehydes, ketones, and esters), and as a combustion rate catalyst for ammonium perchlorate propellants.

The upstream of the industry chain mainly relies on basic chemical raw materials, primarily including copper nitrate, chromium nitrate, and additives such as barium and manganese. Its cost is significantly affected by fluctuations in the prices of bulk non-ferrous metal minerals.

Global sales are projected to be approximately 1300 tons in 2025, with an average market price of approximately US$15,800 per ton. The industry's gross profit margin is in the range of 20%-35%.

Despite facing increasingly stringent environmental regulations, copper chromite maintains its dominant position in irreplaceable fields such as high-temperature hydrogenation, fine chemical synthesis, and aerospace propellants.

On the one hand, with the rise of the hydrogen energy industry and biomass chemical industry, the demand for copper chromite, as a core catalyst for the hydrogenation of oils and fats to produce biofuels and alcohols, is steadily increasing with the global carbon neutrality process. On the other hand, the explosive growth in the defense and commercial aerospace sectors has created a long-term, consistent demand for copper chromite as a key component of solid propellants.
