Abstracts

The global Copper Sulphate market size is predicted to grow from US$ 465 million in 2025 to US$ 677 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 6.2% from 2026 to 2032.

Copper sulfate is an inorganic compound that combines sulfur with copper. It can kill bacteria, algae, roots, plants, snails, and fungi. The toxicity of copper sulfate depends on the copper content. Copper is an essential mineral.

In 2025, global Copper Sulphate production reached approximately 443.2 K MT.

Copper sulphate demand is heavily supported by agriculture, where it is a long-established and widely used fungicide and bactericide—both as a standalone product and as a key component in Bordeaux mixture for crop protection. Use is closely tied to planted acreage of high-value crops (such as fruits, vegetables, vineyards, and ornamentals) and to disease pressure driven by humidity and rainfall patterns. In many regions it also plays a role in seed treatment and certain soil or foliar micronutrient programs, so seasonal farming cycles and growers' preventive disease-management practices continue to underpin baseline demand.

A second driver comes from water and industrial treatment applications. Copper sulphate is commonly used for algae control in reservoirs, ponds, and irrigation canals, and in some wastewater and process-water systems where biological growth causes operational issues. Municipal maintenance needs, aquaculture pond management, and industrial cooling or water-storage systems can all contribute to consumption. More broadly, copper sulphate is used across several industrial processes—such as mining/metallurgy, chemical manufacturing, and surface treatment—so activity levels in these sectors can meaningfully influence demand in specific markets.

Finally, demand is also shaped by regulatory and sustainability considerations, which can act as both a tailwind and a constraint. In crop protection, copper-based products are often valued where growers need reliable, broad-spectrum disease control—particularly in certain integrated pest management (IPM) and organic-leaning programs—yet copper application limits and environmental concerns can cap usage rates or encourage alternative solutions. This dynamic tends to shift demand toward more efficient formulations, tighter dosing practices, and higher-quality grades, sustaining the market while gradually changing the mix of applications and the growth trajectory across regions.
