The global Data Center Facility Management market size is predicted to grow from US$ 3866 million in 2025 to US$ 7015 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 9.1% from 2026 to 2032.

Data Center Facility Management is the professional management of the various physical infrastructures and supporting systems within a data center that ensure the stable operation of IT equipment. It involves the full lifecycle planning, operation, monitoring, and optimization of these systems. The management scope covers multiple core systems, including power supply and distribution systems (such as UPS uninterruptible power supplies, diesel generators, and distribution cabinets), cooling and heat dissipation systems (such as air-cooled/water-cooled units, precision air conditioners, and hot/cold aisles), security and fire protection systems (such as access control, video surveillance, and gas extinguishing systems), physical space and server racks, cabling, and environmental monitoring systems.

The integration of AI technology enables data center facility management systems to achieve more accurate predictive maintenance and intelligent resource scheduling. For example, machine learning algorithms have achieved an accuracy rate of over 92% in scenarios such as power load prediction and cooling system optimization, significantly reducing operation and maintenance costs and failure rates. Simultaneously, automated operation and maintenance modules integrated with DevOps toolchains effectively improve incident response efficiency. The integration of optimized and clean energy management systems is becoming an important trend, with the increasing application of renewable energy sources such as solar and wind power in data centers. The penetration rate of new heat dissipation technologies such as liquid cooling is continuously increasing, and the corresponding fluid dynamics modeling and thermal management systems are becoming key technological challenges. With the development of cloud computing, data center facility management is also showing a trend towards cloudification. Cloud-based management models can provide more flexible deployment and management methods, reducing enterprise operation and maintenance costs. At the same time, the trend of data center consolidation is also strengthening, with enterprises achieving more efficient operation and management by integrating data center resources.
