Dental consumables and dental instruments are medical appliances and tools used in the fields of dentistry and oral medicine for oral diagnosis, treatment, restoration and maintenance. They play a key role in oral hygiene and dental treatments and are used to meet the dental and oral health needs of patients.

Rising consumption of sugary and starchy foods, rise in unhealthy eating habits due to rising urbanization, and changing living standards are some of the major factors contributing to the rise in dental problems, which is expected to drive industry growth. According to the World Health Organization's Global Oral Health Status Report (2022), approximately 3.5 billion people worldwide suffer from dental disease, a quarter of whom live in middle-income countries. Furthermore, the availability of Medicare and Medicaid policies creating a favorable reimbursement environment for treatment is expected to drive the demand for dental procedures.
