Dental methyl methacrylate (PMMA) is a common synthetic polymer also known as acrylic or plexiglass. It has the advantages of high transparency, low price, and easy machining, so it is widely used in the dental field. In dentistry, PMMA is often used to make dentures and dental restorative materials. It has good transparency and can simulate the color and translucency of natural teeth, making the restored teeth look more natural. At the same time, PMMA has good durability and anti-wear properties, which can resist damage from various external forces and ensure the durability of the repair effect. In addition, as a dental material, PMMA has good biological adaptability and will not cause harm to the human body.
