Digital certificate management refers to a series of activities to effectively manage the entire life cycle of digital certificates, including the issuance, storage, update, revocation and verification of digital certificates, to ensure the security and reliability of digital certificates in scenarios such as network communications and electronic transactions. Digital certificates are usually issued by an authoritative certificate authority (CA). Before issuing a certificate, the CA will strictly verify the identity of the certificate applicant. This process may include checking the company's business license, personal identification documents, and other documents, as well as verifying the authenticity of the applicant's identity through other means.

With the development of emerging industries such as financial technology, digital currency, and blockchain, new demands have been put forward for digital certificate management. These industries have extremely high requirements for data security and identity authentication, and require more professional and efficient digital certificate management solutions to ensure the safe operation of the business. As government departments continue to advance digital construction in areas such as e-government and smart cities, the application of digital certificate management in government services will become more extensive. For example, businesses such as electronic certificates, electronic documents, and electronic bidding all require digital certificates to ensure the security and credibility of information and improve the efficiency and transparency of government services. Using artificial intelligence and machine learning technologies, digital certificate management can be automated and intelligent. For example, it can automatically identify and analyze the usage patterns of certificates to detect potential security risks and abnormal behaviors in advance; optimize the issuance, renewal, and revocation processes of certificates through intelligent algorithms to improve management efficiency.
