Disposable Sterile Medical Packaging refers to single-use packaging materials or containers specifically designed to enclose medical devices, instruments, pharmaceuticals, or biological products. Its core functions are to maintain sterility of the internal contents from the completion of sterilization (via methods like ethylene oxide, gamma radiation, or autoclaving) until the point of use, prevent contamination by microorganisms or external particles, and enable safe storage and transportation. Typically made of biocompatible, sterilization-resistant materials—such as medical-grade polyethylene (PE), polypropylene (PP), polyester (PET), Tyvek® (spun-bonded olefin), and coated paper—it often features tamper-evident structures (e.g., tear notches, heat-sealed edges) and compatibility with sterilization processes. It complies with strict international standards, including ISO 11607 (for sterile barrier systems), FDA 21 CFR Part 880, and EU MDR (Medical Device Regulation), and is widely used for products like syringes, surgical gloves, catheters, and pre-filled injectors.
