Abstracts

The global Dog Health Supplements market size is predicted to grow from US$ 2011 million in 2025 to US$ 3181 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 6.7% from 2026 to 2032.

Dog health supplements are non-pharmaceutical functional products specifically designed for dogs to supplement nutrition, enhance physical fitness, prevent disease, or help improve specific health problems. Their primary goal is not to treat diseases, but rather to support the overall health and quality of life of dogs at different stages of their lives through scientifically formulated active ingredients.

The rapid development of the dog health supplement market is driven by multiple factors, including the increasing humanization of pets, the growing health awareness of pet owners, the aging of the canine population, the popularization of scientific pet care concepts, and consumption upgrades. More and more pet owners regard their dogs as family members and are willing to invest in their long-term health. They proactively use functional products such as joint care, immune support, and intestinal conditioning to prevent diseases and improve their quality of life. At the same time, professional recommendations from veterinarians, the convenience of e-commerce channels, and brands' emphasis on ingredient transparency and efficacy verification have further enhanced consumer trust and purchasing intentions.
