Abstracts

The global Domain Privacy Protection Service market size is predicted to grow from US$ 1892 million in 2025 to US$ 3298 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 8.4% from 2026 to 2032.

A Domain Privacy Protection Service (also known as WHOIS Privacy, Privacy/Proxy Service, or Domain Privacy), is a registrar-provided security and data-protection service that replaces or redacts a domain registrant’s personally identifiable information (PII)—such as name, address, phone number, and email—from public WHOIS/RDAP databases. Its core purpose is to protect domain owners from unwanted exposure, spam harvesting, phishing, social-engineering attacks, identity theft, and physical harassment, while ensuring regulatory compliance and maintaining controlled channels for legitimate contact or legal disclosure.

Gross Profit Margin Level

Domain privacy protection services are a very asset-light, almost "pure software + compliance" value-added service: the marginal costs are mainly the WHOIS agent system, database maintenance, support team, and compliance management, while the incremental cost per domain is close to zero. Therefore, for registrars using a paid model, the gross profit margin of the "privacy protection product line" alone can often reach 70%–85%; even considering discounts and channel revenue sharing, the profit margin is still considerable. However, as GDPR, ICANN policies, and market competition drive more and more vendors to "make" privacy services "free," the direct revenue from privacy features is weakening for some brands, with profits contributing more indirectly through improving domain retention rates, increasing ARPU for security packages, and cross-selling (hosting, email, website building, DNS security). From a global perspective, considering the structure of "paid privacy + free privacy across subsidies," the weighted average gross profit margin of domain privacy protection services is roughly in the range of 50%–65%. Leading registrars achieve high gross profits through brand premiums and security packages, while small and medium-sized registrars tend to treat privacy as a "standard feature" for customer acquisition and increased stickiness, recovering costs from the overall profit pool of domain and hosting services.

Industry Drivers

The growth of domain privacy protection services is mainly driven by three factors: increased privacy awareness, rising risks of cyberattacks and social engineering, and a tightening regulatory compliance environment. First, with the frequent occurrence of data breaches, nuisance calls, spam, and "doxxing" incidents globally, more and more individuals and businesses are aware of the risks of exposing their real names, phone numbers, and addresses in WHOIS, and are actively seeking technical solutions to "hide the domain owner." Second, spammers, fraud gangs, and extortionists commonly use WHOIS databases to mass-scrape contact information as an attack entry point, making domain privacy services deeply integrated with anti-spam, account security, and brand protection, becoming a "standard security configuration" for SMEs and e-commerce websites upon launch. Furthermore, EU GDPR and other privacy regulations have strengthened the obligation to protect personal data, prompting registrars and registries to widely adopt WHOIS redaction and privacy agent models, with many TLDs even regarding privacy as the default setting.
