A clean email list is critical for success in email marketing. If you fail to remove inactive subscribers and addresses that continually “bounce” back your emails, you risk your campaigns getting sent straight to the spam box, or worse, your sender address will be blocked altogether. Let’s be clear – there are two situations regularly cleaning your list can help you to avoid, and they both have to do with your reputation, whether with people or email spam filters:

List cleaning helps you to avoid recipients marking you as spam (which, in turn, can contribute to your emails getting blocked by some providers) – if you are sending to people who aren’t interested, you are doing more harm than good. List cleaning helps you to avoid damaging your ‘sender score’ (a measure that signals to email providers the trustworthiness of an outgoing email address) – if you damage your sender score by getting too many bounces you can get blocked by email providers.
