The global Emu Meat market size is predicted to grow from US$ 90.22 million in 2025 to US$ 190 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 11.5% from 2026 to 2032.

Emu meat refers to meat products derived from the Australian emu (Dromaius novaehollandiae), processed through quarantine, slaughtering, and cutting into edible portions, representing a premium healthy meat category within the global specialty poultry market. The emu is a large, flightless bird native to Australia, the second-largest bird in the world after the African ostrich, with an adult weight of approximately 40-60 kg and high lean meat yield. Emu meat is dark red in color with fine, tender texture, and a rich, unique flavor that falls between beef and venison. Its nutritional profile is characterized by high protein, low fat, and low cholesterol, rich in iron, zinc, selenium, and Omega-3/Omega-6 unsaturated fatty acids, earning it the reputation of 'green healthy meat.' The emu was officially included in China's National Livestock and Poultry Genetic Resources Catalog in 2020, making it a legally farmable, slaughterable, processable, and marketable poultry species. Emu meat is widely used in high-end food service, home cooking, functional food ingredients, and pet food raw materials. Major global farming and consumption regions include China, the United States, Australia, Canada, and India.

In terms of pricing, emu meat is positioned as a premium specialty meat, with retail prices significantly higher than conventional poultry and beef, varying notably by cut and product form, with fillet and fan fillet commanding the highest prices while mince and offal are lower. Gross margins at the farming level are volatile due to feed costs and production cycles, while further-processed products (e.g., jerky, sausages) yield higher margins than fresh meat sales, with branded operators achieving better profitability. Downstream applications are dominated by high-end food service and household retail, with emerging growth in pet food ingredients and functional nutrition products. Upstream farming is geographically fragmented, with Australia possessing mature vertically integrated models, China having the largest farming scale but lower value-added processing, and India and the US dominated by small-to-medium farms. The industry structure remains highly fragmented, with no global monopoly; competition is centered around regional brands and specialty suppliers. Uncertainties include evolving regulatory frameworks as emus are included in national livestock catalogs, the pace of consumer acceptance, competition from alternative specialty meats (ostrich, crocodile, etc.), and farming cost volatility due to feed and breeding stock availability. Conclusion: the emu meat industry is transitioning from a market cultivation phase to rapid growth, driven by healthy eating trends and consumer interest in exotic meats, characterized by a disconnect between farming and processing, low proportion of further-processed products, and insufficient branding, representing a specialty meat category with substantial growth potential.
