An ESD (Electrostatic Discharge) laminate sheet is a specialized material designed to control and dissipate static electricity. It is typically a multi-layered composite with a base material such as plastic or paper, which is treated or coated with conductive substances. These sheets have a specific surface resistivity that allows them to slowly conduct static charges to a ground, preventing the sudden and potentially damaging discharge of static electricity. ESD laminate sheets are used in environments where electrostatic-sensitive electronic components are manufactured, assembled, stored, or used, such as electronics factories, clean rooms, and data centers, to safeguard against damage caused by electrostatic discharge.
