The extendable tail cable hoist is a hydraulic or electric lifting device installed at the tail of a truck or transport vehicle. It has a retractable platform structure and is specially used to lift heavy objects from the ground to the carriage or unload them from the carriage to the ground. Compared with traditional fixed tailgates, its telescopic function makes it more flexible and efficient when loading and unloading extra-long or large goods. It is suitable for scenarios such as urban distribution, warehousing and logistics, handling equipment and construction materials. This type of equipment is usually operated by remote control or buttons, combined with a safety lock and overload protection system to ensure a stable and reliable lifting process. It is one of the key components in modern efficient logistics equipment.
