Fabric conditioner is a constituent added to clothes during the washing process to make them softer and more durable. The chemicals in these products also remove stains and prevent the fabric from developing static electricity, extending the life of the garment. A fabric conditioner functions by depositing a lubricating chemical on the fabric, which imparts it softness, reduces static cling, and maintains the shape of the garment. Most conditioning products contain added fragrances. Fabric conditioners are available in various forms such as liquids, crystals, capsules, sprays, and sheets.

The rinse cycle fabric softeners (RCFS) accounted for the majority market share and will continue to dominate the market for the next few years. One of the major factors responsible for the growing adoption of RCFS among consumers is its cost-effectiveness as it is thicker than the regular ones and uses less product to achieve better results.
