Financial AI agents, also known as financial intelligent agents or financial chatbots, are service programs that use artificial intelligence technologies such as machine learning, natural language processing (NLP), and deep learning to simulate human financial advisors or customer service. It can automatically handle customer inquiries, provide investment advice, execute transactions, manage accounts, and perform risk management, thereby improving the efficiency and quality of financial services.

With the evolution of AI technology, financial AI agents are transforming from traditional tools into 'digital employees' with autonomous decision-making capabilities, playing an increasingly central role in financial services. Driven by policy initiatives and technological advancements, China has become the world's leading country in the number of AI agent patents, but fundamental innovation capabilities still need to be enhanced. Modern financial AI agents utilize a closed-loop architecture of 'perception-cognition-decision-execution-reflection,' integrating multimodal perception and tool-invoking capabilities to drive the development of a platform-based ecosystem. Market competition is also accelerating from general-purpose applications to specialized scenarios, with companies rapidly developing niche applications. Despite challenges such as data security and regulatory compliance, their potential in transaction execution, risk management, and other areas remains widely anticipated.
