The global Fireworks Show market size is predicted to grow from US$ 1290 million in 2025 to US$ 1734 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 4.4% from 2026 to 2032.

Fireworks shows is a form of public entertainment that uses professionally designed and launched pyrotechnics as a visual art form. At its core, they involve launching fireworks containing chemical substances such as metal salts to a predetermined height, controlling the chemical formula, trajectory, and electronic ignition timing to create specific patterns, colors, and rhythmic combinations in the night sky. Modern fireworks displays have evolved into comprehensive shows integrating music, light, and narrative themes, using computer programming to synchronously control thousands of fireworks for precise coordination of sound and light effects. This art form combines traditional craftsmanship with modern technology, delivering joy and awe through instantaneous visual explosions, becoming a core carrier of iconic cultural celebrations.

Fireworks show exhibits distinct regional characteristics globally. China, as the country of invention, boasts a complete industrial chain, and its performances are renowned for their grand scale and traditional use in festivals, especially indispensable for celebrations like the Spring Festival. Japan is known for its exquisite artistry and summer fireworks festival culture, combining folk customs with competitive elements. The European and American markets focus on synchronized music shows and large-scale public celebrations, such as the iconic performances for American Independence Day and French Bastille Day. Emerging markets like the Middle East are beginning to introduce high-end fireworks shows as tourism and commercial highlights. Globally, the development of environmentally friendly and noise-reducing fireworks is becoming a common trend, while some regions have strict restrictions on their use due to safety and environmental considerations. Overall, fireworks displays continue to play a vital role in cultural heritage preservation, driving tourism, and commercial marketing.

The supply chain for fireworks show is clearly defined. Upstream are fireworks designers and manufacturers (such as Dongxin and Panda Fireworks), responsible for product research and development and manufacturing. Downstream customers include government agencies (organizers of large-scale celebrations), theme parks (Disney, Universal Studios), event planning companies, and tourist attractions, who purchase and organize the final performance.

The cost of fireworks show mainly consists of product procurement, design and execution of the display, safety and security, and equipment logistics. Customized special effects fireworks and high-end programming design constitute the majority of direct costs. Gross profit margins vary significantly depending on the project type: large-scale government celebrations have a gross profit margin of approximately 30%-40%, diluted by economies of scale; commercial performances can reach over 50%, mainly relying on creative premiums; while regular theme park performances maintain a stable margin of around 35% through long-term contracts. The core of profitability lies in the comprehensive control of creative design capabilities and safety costs.
