Fishing braided line, often referred to simply as braided line, is a special type of fishing line used for fishing (fishing) activities. Unlike traditional nylon or monofilament fishing thread, braided wire is made of multiple fine fibers of polyethylene or other synthetic material and then coated to increase abrasion resistance and UV resistance

The industry trend for fishing braided lines is focused on enhancing performance and environmental sustainability. Manufacturers are developing lines with improved casting distance and knot strength, offering anglers more options for different fishing styles and species. Additionally, there's a growing emphasis on creating eco-friendly fishing lines, including biodegradable or recyclable materials. Specialized coatings that reduce water absorption and improve line durability are also becoming more common. As fishing regulations evolve to protect marine ecosystems, the industry is responding by producing braided lines that meet these requirements while maintaining the superior strength and sensitivity that anglers demand.
