A fixed bridge clarifier is a type of sedimentation system commonly used in circular settling tanks at municipal and industrial water or wastewater treatment plants. Unlike travelling bridge clarifiers used in rectangular tanks, a fixed bridge clarifier has a stationary bridge structure that spans the diameter of a circular tank and serves as the mounting platform for key components such as sludge scrapers, skimmers, and drive mechanisms. Typically, a rotating scraper arm is suspended beneath the bridge and slowly rotates around the tank's center, driven by a central or peripheral drive unit, to collect settled sludge from the tank floor and direct it toward a central sludge hopper. Some designs also include surface skimming mechanisms for removing floating debris. Fixed bridge clarifiers are favored for their simple construction, ease of access to mechanical parts, and durability, making them particularly well-suited for continuous operation in primary or secondary clarification processes. Their design allows for efficient solid-liquid separation in circular tanks, contributing to improved water quality and process reliability.
