The global Flavour Capsule Cigarette market size is predicted to grow from US$ 54870 million in 2025 to US$ 58120 million in 2031; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 1.0% from 2025 to 2031.

Flavour capsule cigarettes are a type of cigarette that contains a small, flavored capsule embedded within the filter. Smokers can crush the capsule, usually by pressing or squeezing it, which releases a liquid flavor additive. This alters the taste and aroma of the cigarette smoke, typically adding flavors like menthol, fruit, or mint.

There were substantial differences in the prevalence of FCC use among adults who smoke across the five countries: Mexico (50.3% in 2021), Republic of Korea (31.8% in 2021), Malaysia (26.5% in 2020), Japan (21.6% in 2021) and Brazil (6.7% in 2016/2017). Correlates of FCC use varied across countries. Capsule use was positively associated with being female in Japan and Mexico, younger age in Japan, Republic of Korea and Malaysia, high education in Brazil, Japan and Mexico, non-daily smoking in Republic of Korea, and having plans to quit in Japan and Republic of Korea. There was no consistent pattern of consumer perceptions of brand harmfulness. Multiple studies have investigated menthol (non-capsule) cigarettes Individual correlations between use of (MNCCs) and flavor capsule cigarettes (FCCs). In many countries, younger age and female sex were associated with use of both products, while other characteristics such as socioeconomic status, race/ethnicity, and living in rural areas often varied or had different results across countries. Compared with traditional flue-cured tobacco, the tar content is lower and the rejection reaction is much smaller. Compared with old smokers who are obsessed with the mellowness of flue-cured tobacco, many young people and women prefer popping bead type cigarettes because of their high appearance and taste.
