Freight forwarding service is an agency that takes on the responsibility of the movement of cargo on behalf of the owner or the exporter or importer of the goods. The freight forwarder does not really move the freight itself, but acts as an intermediary between the company shipping the goods and the logistics and transportation services such as trucking, moving freight by land or by the ocean, or by air. Freight forwarders specialize in a number of areas such as arranging for transport of shipment from one place to another, storage, preparation for shipping, warehousing, documentation, booking spaces for the cargo, negotiating prices, cargo insurance, filing insurance claims, freight consolidation, and deconsolidation and collection services. Many exporters who pick freight forwarding services do so to delegate the task of export documentation and shipping requirements as the forwarder has the expertise to advise and assists their clients in the most efficient way to move their goods from one destination to another. Exporters often find that the extensive knowledge of the forwarder in the regulations, documentation, transportation costs, exporting process, and negotiation works out to be more economical than any other method of exporting their goods. Therefore although a freight forwarder is not mandatory for exporting or importing goods, it is their expertise in the process and navigating through the regulations that cut downtime and costs for exporters. Also, freight forwarders work with a well-knit network of logistics partners such as shipping companies and agents involved with customs and documentation who ease the process and move the shipment through as fast as possible. This means an International freight forwarder is an indispensable partner for any company that deals with the export or import of goods across the globe. They are all the more important for businesses when their in-house resources are not adept in shipping internationally or know the procedures.
