Abstracts

The global Full Truckload Service (FTL) market size is predicted to grow from US$ 162210 million in 2025 to US$ 228350 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 5.1% from 2026 to 2032.

Full vehicle transport service involves transporting a complete vehicle as cargo from its origin to a designated destination via road, rail, water, or air transport. This service is widely used for new vehicle delivery, used car trading and transshipment, private vehicle relocation, and import and export vehicle transport. It typically utilizes specialized transport vehicles (such as commercial vehicle transporters, rail cage cars, or roll-on/roll-off vessels) and includes vehicle handover, in-transit monitoring, insurance coverage, and delivery inspection, ensuring the safety, efficiency, and integrity of the vehicle during transport.

Complete vehicle transportation services are rapidly developing towards scale, information technology, and specialization. With the continued growth in automobile production and sales, and the increasing demand for the circulation of new, used, and new energy vehicles, road and multimodal transport (such as road-rail and water-land transport) have become the mainstream transportation modes, and third-party professional logistics companies are continuously expanding their market share. Currently, the industry is widely using GPS positioning, vehicle networking, and transportation management systems (TMS) to achieve full-process visual tracking and dispatch optimization, improving transportation efficiency and vehicle safety. At the same time, green and low-carbon development requirements are driving the adoption of new energy transportation vehicles. Future trends will focus on digital platform integration, intelligent route planning, automated warehousing and loading and unloading technologies, and strengthening the layout of national and even cross-border transportation networks. This will promote the development of standardized, green, and integrated services across the entire supply chain to meet the needs of diversified automobile consumption and efficient circulation.
