The global Fungal Xylanase market size is predicted to grow from US$ 196 million in 2025 to US$ 297 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 6.2% from 2026 to 2032.

Fungal xylanase is a biocatalyst developed for the efficient and specific degradation of xylan, an anti-nutritional factor or structural barrier widely present in plant materials. Through the irreplaceable biochemical action of specifically cleaving xylan chains, fungal xylanases have become a key tool for solving core bottlenecks in multiple industries: breaking down anti-nutritional factors and improving digestibility in feed; improving dough quality in baking; achieving green bleaching in papermaking; and releasing the value of waste resources in biorefining. They efficiently, safely, and economically achieve structural modification and upgrading of plant materials that are difficult to achieve using physical and chemical methods. The upstream supply chain mainly includes the selection and fermentation raw material supply of high-xylanase-producing fungal strains (such as Aspergillus niger and Trichoderma reesei); the downstream applications are widely used in the feed industry (improving grain digestibility), baking industry (improving dough and bread texture), juice clarification, papermaking biobleaching, and functional sugar preparation, forming a complete value chain from 'strain research and development ? industrial fermentation ? multi-industry application'. Its core value lies in utilizing the high specific activity and specificity of fungal enzymes to replace chemical methods with biological methods, achieving a dual improvement in economic and environmental benefits. In 2025, the production of fungal xylanase is expected to reach approximately 5,000 tons, with an average price of approximately US$40/kg, a gross profit margin of approximately 40%, and a single-line capacity of 100 tons/year.

United States market for Fungal Xylanase is estimated to increase from US$ million in 2025 to US$ million by 2032, at a CAGR of % from 2026 through 2032.

China market for Fungal Xylanase is estimated to increase from US$ million in 2025 to US$ million by 2032, at a CAGR of % from 2026 through 2032.
