Gardner syndrome is a rare genetic disorder which usually starts with the growth of benign cancer growth. The syndrome can cause growth on numerous regions in the body. The huge number of tumor is generally found in colon in large numbers. As the age of the individual rises, the tumors also surge in large numbers. This syndrome is caused because of the defect in adenomatous polyposis coli (APC) gene, that initiates the production of APC protein. The essential role of APC protein is to control the cell growth by avoiding the cells from rapid division.
