Garnet sandpaper is an abrasive coated paper made by bonding finely crushed natural almandine-garnet minerals onto paper or cloth backings using resin systems, producing a sharp but mildly friable abrasive ideal for woodworking, fine finishing, and hand sanding applications; its supply chain begins with mining and concentrating garnet ore, followed by crushing, washing, grading, and micron-sizing the abrasive grains, then formulating phenolic or urea resins, coating them onto kraft paper or cotton backings, electrostatically applying garnet grains, curing, flexing, converting into sheets/rolls/belts, and finally distributing through industrial abrasive suppliers, hardware chains, and OEM woodworking tool brands worldwide. In 2024, global garnet sandpaper output reached 3.2 billion pcs versus 3.9 billion pcs of capacity, priced at USD 0.12–0.35 per pc, with manufacturers maintaining an average 27% gross margin.
