Green coffee beans refer to the raw or unroasted beans that are harvested from the coffee plant. Unlike the brown, flavorful coffee beans commonly used for brewing coffee, green coffee beans have a pale green color and a relatively mild taste. They contain high amounts of chlorogenic acid, which is believed to have potential health benefits. Green coffee beans are often used for making green coffee extracts or supplements, which are popular for their supposed weight loss properties. Roasting is necessary to transform green coffee beans into the familiar dark brown beans used for brewing coffee.
