Green funerals are a relatively new and growing trend in funeral customs that are easier, less expensive, and more environmentally friendly. These days, a lot of people want eco-friendly funerals, which encourages funeral directors to employ renewable and biodegradable resources in place of conventional practices and cremation. The goal of a green burial is to preserve natural resources and cause the least amount of environmental harm. Alternatively referred to as eco-friendly or natural funerals, they emphasize simplicity and sustainability. Reducing the environmental effect of funeral planning is one of the main objectives. Green funerals employ environmentally friendly and biodegradable materials in place of embalming fluids, concrete or metal coffins, and non-biodegradable clothing. They employ environmentally friendly embalming oils free of chemicals. More tree burials, green burial sites, and green burial caskets have resulted from this strategy. Instead of being buried in a concrete vault, the body is interred in a way that preserves the land and the environment. Green funerals are growing in popularity because traditional funerals and cremations are energy-intensive and bad for the environment.
