GRP sandwich panels, or Glass Reinforced Plastic sandwich panels, are composite building materials consisting of two outer layers of fiberglass reinforced plastic (FRP) and a core material sandwiched between them. The core material is typically made of lightweight materials such as polyurethane foam, polystyrene, or honeycomb structures. These panels offer high strength-to-weight ratios, excellent thermal insulation properties, and resistance to corrosion, making them ideal for applications in construction, transportation, and marine industries. GRP sandwich panels are used for roofing, wall cladding, insulation, and structural components in buildings, vehicles, and vessels, providing durability, energy efficiency, and aesthetic appeal.
