PU or polyurethane is the coating material that has been developed as an alternative for heavy industries usage and has ever since become quite a common flooring material. PU flooring is primarily known to have the excellent gloss and colour varieties.

The demand for sustainable flooring materials and systems is growing as environmental concerns and awareness of sustainability increase. Consumers and businesses are seeking flooring options that are made from renewable or recycled materials, have low VOC emissions, and can be easily recycled or disposed of at the end of their life cycle. Sustainable flooring solutions, such as bamboo, cork, reclaimed wood, and eco-friendly carpets, are gaining popularity in residential and commercial applications. Durability and longevity are significant considerations in the flooring system market. Consumers and businesses are looking for flooring options that can withstand heavy foot traffic, frequent use, and wear and tear without significant damage or degradation. Manufacturers are developing flooring systems with enhanced durability, scratch resistance, and easy maintenance to meet these demands. The commercial and industrial sectors are driving the demand for flooring systems. High-traffic areas like offices, retail spaces, healthcare facilities, and public buildings require flooring solutions that can handle heavy loads, resist stains, and withstand rigorous cleaning protocols. Industrial settings such as factories, warehouses, and automotive facilities require flooring systems that are resistant to chemicals, abrasion, and impact. The growing demand from these sectors is driving the innovation and development of new flooring system solutions.
