Industrial cleanroom wipes are low-dust wiping materials specifically designed for cleanrooms and precision manufacturing environments. Made from materials such as polyester, microfiber, or cellulose composites, they undergo washing, edge sealing, and dust removal treatments to effectively absorb particles and oil stains while minimizing fiber shedding. They are widely used for surface cleaning in electronics, semiconductor, optics, and pharmaceutical manufacturing processes.

Upstream suppliers include chemical fiber raw material and wood pulp fiber suppliers, functional additives and cleaning agent manufacturers, packaging material and testing equipment providers, etc.; downstream customers primarily include semiconductor and panel manufacturers, precision electronic assembly companies, optical lens and coating companies, biopharmaceutical and medical device companies, and laboratory and cleanroom engineering operation and maintenance service providers.

In 2024, the global industrial cleanroom wipe market price was $560 per thousand wipes, with sales of approximately 1.5 billion wipes and global production of 1.6-1.8 billion wipes. The industry profit margin was 15-20%.
