Third-party insurance administration (TPA) refers to a model in which an independent third-party organization provides a series of services to insurance companies and insured persons in the insurance field. Third-party insurance administration organizations are responsible for handling insurance claims. They receive claims applications from insured persons, conduct audits, investigations, and assessments to determine the rationality and legality of the claims. TPA organizations will cooperate with medical institutions, repair shops, etc. to verify the authenticity and accuracy of claim expenses and ensure the reasonable payment of claims. In the field of health insurance, TPA organizations usually provide medical management services. They cooperate with medical institutions to establish medical networks and provide high-quality medical services to insured persons. TPA organizations can assist insured persons in choosing appropriate medical institutions, arranging medical consultations and hospitalizations, supervising the medical process, and ensuring the quality and rationality of medical services.
