Kounis syndrome, also known as allergic angina or allergic myocardial infarction, is a medical condition characterized by the occurrence of acute coronary events, such as angina or myocardial infarction (heart attack), in the presence of an allergic reaction or anaphylaxis. The condition is primarily caused by the release of inflammatory mediators (such as histamine) during an allergic reaction, which can lead to coronary artery spasm and reduced blood flow to the heart. The treatment of Kounis syndrome involves managing both the underlying allergic reaction and the cardiac symptoms.
