LDPE (Low-Density Polyethylene) geomembrane is a type of synthetic liner or barrier used in various civil engineering and environmental applications. It is made from low-density polyethylene resin, which offers excellent flexibility, chemical resistance, and impermeability. Here is an overview of LDPE geomembrane:

- Impermeability: LDPE geomembrane is designed to provide a highly impermeable barrier. It prevents the passage of liquids, gases, or contaminants through the liner, making it suitable for applications where containment and isolation are required.
- Environmental Protection: LDPE geomembrane plays a vital role in environmental protection. It is commonly used for lining landfills, wastewater treatment ponds, hazardous waste storage facilities, mining containment areas, and other applications to prevent leaks and protect surrounding soil and groundwater from contamination.

3. Flexibility: LDPE geomembrane is flexible and can conform to irregular surfaces and shapes, making it suitable for lining complex geometries such as ponds, reservoirs, canals, and tanks. This flexibility allows for better installation and helps to accommodate ground movements or settlement.
4. Chemical Resistance: LDPE geomembrane exhibits excellent resistance to a wide range of chemicals, including acids, bases, salts, and organic solvents. This chemical resistance ensures the long-term effectiveness of the liner in environments with potential exposure to aggressive substances.
5. UV Resistance: LDPE geomembrane can be manufactured with added UV stabilizers to enhance its resistance to degradation by ultraviolet (UV) radiation from sunlight. This makes it suitable for exposed applications where prolonged outdoor exposure is expected.
