Legal consulting service platforms leverage the internet and information technology to integrate lawyers, legal advisors, legal information databases, and intelligent question-and-answer technology to provide individuals, businesses, and institutions with online services such as legal consulting, contract review, compliance guidance, and litigation advisory. Their downstream services primarily target individual users (for matters related to marriage and family, labor disputes, and consumer rights protection), corporate clients (for matters related to contract management, intellectual property, corporate compliance, and investment and financing due diligence), and government and social organizations (for policy and regulatory consultation and public legal services), covering a wide range of demand scenarios. Because these platforms employ an asset-light, service-focused model, revenue primarily comes from membership subscriptions, pay-per-use consulting, and corporate legal advisory services. Overall gross profit margins are generally high, typically around 70%.
