Abstracts

The global Litigation Finance market size is predicted to grow from US$ 18887 million in 2025 to US$ 39595 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 11.2% from 2026 to 2032.

Litigation finance (also known as litigation funding or third-party funding) refers to the practice where a third-party funder provides capital to a plaintiff or law firm in exchange for a portion of any eventual settlement or judgment award. This asset class has evolved from a niche practice into a sophisticated global industry spanning commercial litigation, intellectual property disputes, international arbitration, and mass tort claims.

The global litigation finance market is experiencing rapid growth, driven by rising legal costs, increasing complexity of commercial disputes, and growing acceptance of third-party funding across jurisdictions.

The increasing cost of legal services is the primary driver of litigation finance adoption. According to market analysis, 'the growth in the historic period can be attributed to increasing legal costs across jurisdictions, rising complexity of commercial litigation, and expansion of third-party funding acceptance'. The increase in legal conflicts?driven by growing complexity of business contracts and commercial transactions involving multiple parties, jurisdictions, and regulatory frameworks?fuels demand for funding.

The market is seeing 'increasing institutional investor participation' as a key growth driver. Litigation funding offers returns that are largely independent of financial market movements and macroeconomic cycles, providing valuable portfolio diversification. The asset class exhibits low correlation to traditional financial markets, making it attractive for institutional investors seeking uncorrelated returns.

Companies, industries, and supply chains are increasingly globalized, leading to more cross-border disputes and international arbitration cases. Litigation funders have taken notice, with members of the International Legal Finance Association now having offices throughout the world. Increased expertise and sophistication is unlocking more capital for valuable international claims, with law firms developing experienced teams that can pursue cross-border claims from start to finish.

Litigation funding improves access to justice by enabling smaller entities and individuals to compete with well-resourced corporations. Without capital from funders, small businesses and individuals would not be able to take their cases to court against large corporations with sizeable legal budgets. In the UK, funding has supported significant cases such as the sub-postmasters' fight against the Post Office, various equal pay claims, and consumer rights cases.

Regulatory changes across jurisdictions are shaping market growth. In Australia, the High Court's August 2025 decision (Kain v R&B Investments) clarified that federal courts have the power to make common fund orders for the benefit of third-party funders at settlement or judgment. The UK is considering the Litigation Funding Agreements (Enforceability) Bill to reverse the PACCAR decision and restore the viability of litigation funding agreements. In the US, various states are enacting disclosure requirements while balancing access to justice concerns.

International arbitration represents a significant growth segment. Sub-categories include investor-state disputes, cross-border commercial arbitration, treaty-based arbitrations, construction disputes, and energy sector arbitration. The European market is particularly active, with compensation claims rising due to developments in competition law, GDPR enforcement, and application of the 'Damages' Directive.
