Abstracts

The global Long-term Care Support Service market size is predicted to grow from US$ 389064 million in 2025 to US$ 1256052 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 18.0% from 2026 to 2032.

Long-term Care Support Service refers to a comprehensive care system provided over an extended period for elderly, disabled, semi-disabled, or chronically ill individuals. It includes daily living assistance, basic medical care support, rehabilitation services, psychological care, and social support. The service is typically delivered through coordination among families, communities, nursing institutions, and professional caregivers, aiming to improve quality of life and functional independence while reducing family caregiving burden.

Long-term care support services are being increasingly driven by global population aging, with a continuously expanding elderly population that is disabled or semi-disabled. This is transforming long-term care from a family-based responsibility into a more structured and socialized service system. The industry is also evolving from basic daily assistance toward an integrated “medical + nursing + rehabilitation” model, with stronger integration between healthcare institutions, nursing facilities, and community-based care.

Meanwhile, there is a clear shift toward home-based and community-based care models due to their cost efficiency and alignment with user preferences, supported by favorable policy frameworks. In parallel, digital technologies such as remote health monitoring, wearable devices, and AI-driven care platforms are improving operational efficiency and care quality. The industry is also becoming more standardized and professionalized through structured care classification systems, workforce training, and regulatory
