Abstracts

The global Major Bulk Shipping market size is predicted to grow from US$ 50880 million in 2025 to US$ 63680 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 3.3% from 2026 to 2032.

Major bulk shipping (dry bulk) is the ocean transport of unpackaged bulk commodities such as iron ore, coal, grain and fertilizers using specialized bulk carriers (Handysize, Supramax/Ultramax, Panamax, Capesize). Operations include time charters, voyage charters and spot market trading.

The dry bulk shipping market remains cyclical, tightly linked to commodity production (steelmaking, coal power, agriculture) and macroeconomic trends. Over the past years, supply-side dynamics—ship newbuild deliveries, scrapping rates, and slow-steaming practices—combine with demand shifts (China's infrastructure cycle, agricultural export seasons) to set freight rates. Shipping companies diversify commercial strategies across voyage/TC/spot exposures to manage volatility; many use financial hedging and long-term contracts for cashflow stability. Environmental regulation (IMO decarbonization measures, speed limits, and future fuel shifts) is a major strategic focus: owners are retrofitting or ordering dual-fuel / more efficient designs, affecting fleet economics and capital expenditure profiles. Consolidation and pooling arrangements allow some operators to stabilize utilization and bargaining power. Short-term shocks—port congestion, geopolitical events, weather disruptions—can spike rates, but structural growth depends on commodity cycles and global trade patterns. Investment appetite will hinge on expectations for seaborne trade growth and the pace of fleet renewal to meet decarbonization targets.
