Abstracts

The global Manganese Briquettes market size is predicted to grow from US$ 365 million in 2025 to US$ 505 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 4.9% from 2026 to 2032.

In 2025, global Manganese Briquettes production reached approximately 160.5 k tons, with an average global market price of around US$2,324 per ton. Manganese briquettes are compacted, spherical alloy products primarily composed of manganese. Manufactured from manganese ore through smelting and processing, they enhance steel strength, toughness, and corrosion resistance, widely used in steelmaking and foundry industries.

The manganese briquettes market is characterized by a demand structure dominated by steelmaking, where manganese's roles in desulfurizing, deoxidizing and alloying create resilient, cyclical consumption tied to infrastructure and manufacturing activity. Supply is concentrated among a few large mining and processing operators, so mine location, beneficiation capacity and logistics costs are primary competitive levers. A clear industry trend is the shift toward lower-carbon, higher-value manganese products as producers respond to 'green steel' requirements and seek process improvements; this is being reflected in corporate disclosures and annual reports. Constraints include feedstock grade variability, port and long-haul transport bottlenecks, tightening environmental compliance costs and trade policy uncertainty. Opportunities arise from growth in electric-furnace steel and specialty alloy demand, which favor higher-purity and low-carbon briquettes, and from expanded recycling and near-market processing that can stabilize supply and enhance margins. Competitive advantage will depend on vertical integration, proximity to consumption centers, consistent quality control and capital investment for decarbonization and modernization.
