The global Maritime Intelligence Solution market size is predicted to grow from US$ 95.53 million in 2025 to US$ 134 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 5.0% from 2026 to 2032.

To address issues such as ambiguous maritime situational awareness, delayed intelligence gathering, and high risks in navigation decision-making, maritime intelligence solutions have emerged. Since the rise of maritime informatization in the late 20th century, the field of maritime safety and operations management has entered a new stage of development. Currently, maritime intelligence solutions have evolved into critical information systems that integrate multi-source information, including satellite remote sensing, Automatic Identification System (AIS), radar data, meteorological and hydrological data, and open-source intelligence. Through intelligent analysis and visualization platforms, these systems are widely used in naval defense, commercial shipping, port management, and maritime law enforcement, significantly improving maritime situational awareness, navigation safety, and operational decision-making efficiency.

The "14th Five-Year Plan for Marine Economic Development" and the "National Maritime Security Strategy Outline" explicitly incorporate the construction of a maritime intelligence system into the national security strategy. The "Maritime Intelligence Data Element Specification" issued by the National Standardization Management Committee has for the first time unified the definitions of 132 core data elements, promoting cross-departmental data interoperability. With the increasing demand for maritime security along the "Belt and Road" initiative, maritime intelligence solutions are deeply integrating into the global shipping digital ecosystem, injecting new momentum into the high-quality development of the marine economy.
