Mass selling snack shops, also known as snack discount stores, represent a new retail model distinct from traditional snack shops. They focus on offering a wide variety of snacks from multiple brands, attracting large customer volumes through low prices and bulk sales. The term "mass selling" originates from Japanese, emphasizing the strategy of large-scale procurement and sales to achieve cost-effective pricing. These stores typically purchase goods directly from brand owners or distributors, bypassing intermediaries, allowing them to offer a diverse range of affordable snacks, catering to the demand for variety and high cost-performance in lower-tier markets.
