Menthyl lactate, also known as 2-hydroxypropionic acid-5-methyl-2-isopropylcyclohexyl ester, is a mint derivative and belongs to a cool product. In the past, the cooler products designed by formulators could only use mint. There is no other option. However, mint is very volatile and irritating, resulting in a strong and short cooling effect, which masks the smell of fragrance due to its special mint flavor. In response to the market gap, a long-acting and odorless cooling agent was launched: menthyl lactate, which has a slight mint aroma and tastes almost tasteless, but is accompanied by a long-lasting, pleasant cooling effect, which is considered excellent and no bad Cooling agents that respond to burning, irritation, and tingling sensations are mainly used in daily chemical products, pharmaceutical preparations, oral products, and confectionery products.
