Merchant photomasks are professional photomask products independently R&D, manufactured and commercially sold by third-party specialized vendors. They provide standardized and customized solutions for downstream customers such as wafer fabs and display panel manufacturers, distinguished from in-house photomasks produced by fabs for their own exclusive use. As core commercial components for pattern transfer in lithography processes of semiconductor and display industries, they are synonymous with external and third-party photomasks in the industry. Soda-lime glass photomasks cost a few hundred USD each; mainstream quartz ones range from thousands to tens of thousands USD; advanced DUV photomasks exceed 100,000 USD; EUV photomasks are over 1,000,000 USD per piece, with prices surging exponentially by process precision and substrate grade. Industrial Chain: Upstream includes high-purity glass blanks, light-shielding films, photoresists and high-precision manufacturing/inspection equipment. Midstream is third-party merchant photomask manufacturers and in-house fab production. Downstream serves semiconductors, display panels, PCBs and MEMS, with core technologies and production capacity highly concentrated in upstream key materials and midstream leading players.
