A repeater complication is a true marvel in modern horology. When a slide lever is pressed on the watch-case, the timepiece rings out the time through a series of chimes. A minute repeater strikes out the hours, quarters and minutes on request while a quarter repeater strikes only for hours and quarters. Repeaters helped the visually impaired tell time and before the spread of electricity, repeaters would help tell time in the dark. Today, minute repeaters are one of the most complex watch mechanisms and are highly coveted by watch enthusiasts for their masterful engineering and beautiful acoustics.
