Abstracts

Mometasone furoate is a fluoride-free hormone and is a soft hormone. After topical application of radiolabelled mometasone furoate to the skin, skin biopsies show that the drug is located mainly in the outer layer of the epidermis, with only a small amount entering the dermis. Most of the drug binds to the stratum corneum, where it forms a reservoir of mometasone furoate that can be slowly released, and only a small proportion of mometasone furoate is absorbed transdermally into the circulation, so the risk of systemic effects occurring is extremely low.
